

Original title: "9 Subtle Things That Reveal a Lack of Character in Someone" (Medium)
Rewritten for portfolio purposes

English original sample

We choose the people we allow into our personal and professional spaces based on their character.

At first, someone's appearance, charm, or shared interests might attract us. However, it's their character that ultimately determines if they stay in our lives and for how long.

People with strong character are intentional about their relationships. They understand that the connections they form can either build them up or tear them down.

Because of this, they're careful about who they get close to and the kind of energy they allow into their lives.

English rewrite sample

Everybody knows that a person's character is the key to our personal and professional spaces.

On the one hand, we can get attracted to someone if we like the person's look, charm, or share the same interests. On the other hand, character is the key factor that determines whether our relationship with this person will continue.

Relationships with strong individuals are usually closely monitored by them. They are totally aware that these connections can either uplift them or break them down in a moment. As a result, life can easily turn into a dream — or into the worst nightmare.

These are the reasons why such people are selective about who they let in and why they're careful with the kind of energy they allow into their lives.